But likes and dislikes are notoriously variable. And final cause in turn leaves the door open to a rationally defensible mono-theistic philosophy.

This pigeonholing leads Feser to conclusions like that same-sex marriage is This allows him to argue that it's wrong to use a penis for anything other than 1 urination, 2 sex. Its a cosmology at the very least, and when wrapped in ritual It sure starts to look an awful lot like religion. No, I stand by what I said. Speaking engagements. I also understand Feser wanting to state his case with the conviction displayed by his adversaries. He makes short work of the New Atheists due to the poverty of their arguments, and then briefly presents arguments that modernity is more comprehensible if one considers modern problems in light of broadly Aristotelian philosophy.
