I know first-hand how much this hurts, how painful it is to lose a person you love so much, and boy did it trigger my emotions. Look, for instance, at this deceptively simple description at the start of chapter two: "I was summoned to the king.

I also often felt that Patroclus seemed more like a wife than a gay man. And I love him. He has a sense of humor and a gentleness. It is awash with pain and brutality.

I had to make my best guess on the norms of the time based on the scholarship that I have. I will never forget this book. To protect what she loves most, Circe must summon all her strength and choose, once and for all, whether she belongs with the gods she is born from, or the mortals she has come to love.
